MAIN RESEARCH

CUSTOMER Research

1) AI PROMPT:

"I want you to conduct psychographic research on the type of customer that's most likely to buy this product.

Here's what I need. What is the target audience of this product? What are their pain points and desires? What ADs are currently being run? What is science saying? Are there any new unique mechanisms / angles on the market?, What are their deepest insecurities (fears, doubts, frustrations, and blame also)"

2) Who Is Our Target Audience?

The primary buyer for HelloNancy is a woman aged 40-50, navigating the complex stages of perimenopause and early menopause.

She is often a high-functioning individual who has spent decades building a career, nurturing a family, and cultivating a reputation for competence and capability. She has given everything to her family, and those whom she loves around her, and she also feels this way (especially the divorced ones)

The onset of menopause has introduced a profound disruption to her sense of self and her daily functioning.

For a lot of these women, they are either still within and fighting for their relationship, or they've left and are now divorced, but instead, now fighting for themselves.

3) What are Their MAIN Pain Points?

- BRAIN FOG: Many of these women feel as though their brains... have simply just been switched off. Every day, it feels like "I'm thinking through mud or my brain's filled with wool" Whether it's small things like forgetting where they placed their keys, or something more serious, like forgetting where you are, or forgetting key items within a serious meeting. Many of these women, although being at their peaks within their career, feel as though they are slowly losing everything.
- IDENTITY DISSOCIATION: "I don't even know who I am anymore." That woman I once was? It feels as though she's disappeared and is nowhere to be found... Everytime I look in the mirror, I can't even recognise myself anymore. "Some days I feel like a stranger who's borrowing it. Like the person I knew how to be has gone quiet and I'm waiting for her to come back." I don't feel feminine anymore, I don't feel attractive, I don't feel loved. It feels as though I've just lost everything overnight. I miss how I felt when I was first married, I miss how confident and happy I used to be. I pray to be that woman every single night, but if I'm being completely honest, I don't think she'll ever even be coming back.

- HIDDEN SYMPTOMS: Many of these women experience bizarre and painful symptoms such as "rectal muscle spasms, a waxy scalp, itchy ears, and "itchy boobs." Sometimes, even joint pain or frozen shoulders which just make movement too hard. I bring this up to my OBGYN, but honestly? Every single time, I just get disregarded. I know something other than "HOT FLASHES" is wrong with me, but they don't seem to listen. Everything I say to them. It just goes into one ear, and comes straight out of the other...
- BODY ODOUR: Many of them, ever since Menopause has overtaken their lives, they feel...unclean. My skin always feels like crap, not smooth and shiny like others, but more like...sandpaper. I spend sooo much on expensive skincare routines, ones women my age swear by, but they never seem to help.
- VAGINAL ATROPHY: Something that not only me, but also my Husband used to enjoy so much, intercourse, has now disappeared from our lives. Every moment we're close, whilst he's enjoying it, it feels like "acid is being poured on my vulva." I never meant for this distance between us, it's just that the pain is too much to bear.
- ROOMATES / LIBIDO DISAPPEARANCE: "We're basically roommates now." That's how every moment together feels, not like the lovers we once were when we were young. But roommates. No flirting, no excitement, no feeling desired. In fact, I can't even remember the last time we were intimate. I miss how it used to feel, I miss how he used to make me feel. I miss feeling pursued and wanted. Sometimes, it doesn't even feel like we are a married couple, just friends putting on an act to show the rest of the world...
- FAKE INTIMACY: Intimacy is now one of my deepest worries. I don't feel confident about being intimate like I once used to. Everytime someone gets close, I get worried about being judged. I avoid situations where I might be vulnerable like this. I want to do these things, but my body won't allow me to...She wants to look her partner in the eye and actually mean it when they say "that was amazing." But her body will not allow her. Every moment feels like sandpaper rubbing against my skin. I want to be there, I want to be present and do the thing I once enjoyed so much, but sometimes, the hurt is just too much to bear. Sometimes, she's gone as far as faking the orgasm just to get out of it.
- IRRITABILITY: A lot of the time, I feel major resentment to those around me, even for nothing! I can't even explain it. "My perpetual annoyance with everyone, especially my husband when he brushes his teeth wrong or makes toast too loud." I hate being this angry shadow of the person I once was, but I just don't know how to get out of it.
- FEAR OF BEING ALONE: Is this what my life is going to be like forever? ALONE. Will I ever find love again? Will anyone even want to love me like this? I watch as everyone moves on, but I remain stuck behind. I want somebody, I want someone to love me, but it feels as though the entire world has moved on without me.

- PAST SOLUTION: They've tried everything. Supplements, medications, even new vibrators and sex toys. But no matter what they use, no matter how much they spend, nothing seems to help them and their body. They feel as though they are stuck feeling this way. Devoid of feeling, and tired of chasing something that seems impossible.

4) What are Their Deepest Insecurities?

- FEAR: "I am disappearing. I will never be the sharp, sexy, capable woman I was again. My career is in jeopardy, and my marriage is failing.
- She fears that she is permanently broken. Her biggest fear isn't that the product won't work; it's that the product will work for everyone else but not for her, proving that there's no helping her.
- DOUBT: "Is this just me? Am I a hypochondriac? Maybe I'm just weak and unable to handle aging like everyone else."
- She doubts that a "cute lemon" can solve a problem as deep as her 15-year lack of sensation. She suspects the reviews are "too good to be true".
- FRUSTRATION: "I've done everything right—diet, exercise, career—and my body is still failing me. The medical system is useless."
- She feels a simmering resentment toward the ease of male pleasure. "He just shows up and it's over in 5 minutes, while I'm over here doing mental gymnastics and physical labor just to feel a tingle." This frustration often turns into self-blame: "Why can't I just be normal?"
- BLAME: They internalize the blame for "not handling it better" and project blame onto a medical system that refuses to take their suffering seriously.

5) What are Their Deepest Desires?

- SEEN and HEARD: They crave validation that their symptoms are real, severe, and not "in their head." They want their suffering acknowledged.
- COGNITIVE SHARPNESS: Reclaiming the intellectual "edge" that made them successful is paramount. They want their brains back. They don't want to be this shadow they currently are.
- REAWAKENING: They desire to reconnect with their partners without the shadow of physical pain or guilt. They want to feel desirable and capable of pleasure again. This is where HelloNancy's messaging can be particularly potent.
- EFFORTLESS: They don't want to "work" for it. They want a "shortcut" to the sensation they see in movies.

- DESIRE: They want to be desired again by someone. "I want him to look at me the way he used to."
- RELATIONSHIP THEY ONCE HAD: They want to be able to bring back that spark and that excitement within their lives. They want their relationships to feel alive.
- WOMAN THEY ONCE WERE: They want to feel confident in their own skin, not lost, but they want to feel like the woman they once were. They want to look in the mirror and like what they see.
- RELIEF: The desire to look their partner in the eye and actually mean it when they say "that was amazing."
- REJUVANTION: To feel "blood flow" and "life" returning to a part of their body that has felt dormant.

6) What are Their Awareness Levels + Sophistication Levels?

MAIN AUDIENCE: Problem Aware + Solution Aware

SECONDARY: Problem Aware

7) What Is The Overall Customer's Journey? (Map It Out. What Beliefs Need To Change? etc...)

Stage 2: Problem-Aware

In this stage, the woman recognizes that something is wrong, and she has started to connect some of her symptoms to a larger, underlying issue. She might suspect perimenopause or menopause but is still unsure. She is actively searching for information about her symptoms but not necessarily for specific product solutions.

Current State:

- Symptoms: More persistent and disruptive (e.g., frequent hot flashes, significant brain fog, severe mood swings, sleep disturbances, libido changes).
- Beliefs: "These aren't just random symptoms; something is definitely off." "Could this be perimenopause/menopause?" "My doctor isn't taking me seriously."
- Internal Dialogue: "Is this menopause?" "Why are doctors so unhelpful about this?" "I need to find out what's happening to me."

Stage 3: Solution-Aware

At this point, the woman knows her problem (menopause/perimenopause) and is aware that there are various categories of solutions available (e.g., HRT, supplements, lifestyle changes, alternative therapies, and even tools for sexual health). She is evaluating different approaches but hasn't committed to a specific product or brand.

Current State:

- Symptoms: Still present, but she is now actively seeking and evaluating different types of interventions.
- Beliefs: "There are solutions out there, but which one is right for me?" "I've heard about HRT, but I'm scared of the risks." "Are natural remedies effective?" "I need something that actually works."
- Internal Dialogue: "Should I try HRT?" "What about natural supplements?" "Is there anything that can help with my libido?" "I'm tired of feeling this way."

2) What Is The Unique Mechanism Behind The Product? (Problem + Solution)

UMP: After perimenopause, reduced blood flow causes tissue to thin, dry out, and lose sensitivity. Every existing solution — lube, creams, traditional vibrators, medical interventions — relies on friction, which irritates and damages already-compromised tissue. The problem isn't fixed, it's repeatedly aggravated.

UMS: Air-pulse technology stimulates blood flow through contactless pressure waves. No friction. No direct tissue contact. The blood flow returns, the tissue responds, natural moisture follows, and sensation comes back. The body isn't broken — it just needs a mechanism that works with the physiology, not against it.

MECHANISM ADDITION / CLITORIAL SUCTION:

The single-sentence version:

"Your body didn't stop working. It was just being approached the wrong way — friction is the problem, air-pulse is the fix."

3) Is There An Existing Founder Story or Authority Figure?

NOPE. Or at least, none that I personally know of.

4) What Are Their Main Objections In Regards To This Product?

- "Will this actually work for someone like me?"
- "I've already tried other things and nothing worked."
- "Maybe this is just what happens when you get older."
- "Maybe menopause has permanently changed me."
- "The real problem is my relationship, not my libido."
- "I don't feel attractive or desirable anymore."
- "What if I spend the money and it ends up unused in a drawer?"
- "I feel embarrassed buying a product like this."
- "I don't need another temporary fix."
- "What if I've lost that part of myself for good?"

Existing PRODUCT Feedback

What Is The Market Currently Using?

- HRT (Hormone Replacement Therapy)
- Estrogen creams
- Vaginal estrogen treatments
- Libido supplements (Maca, Ashwagandha, Fenugreek, Damiana, etc.)
- Women's hormone balancing supplements
- Relationship counselling
- Marriage therapy
- Lubricants
- Vibrators and suction toys
- Pelvic floor therapy
- Testosterone therapy (less common but growing)
- Books, podcasts, and menopause coaches
- Lifestyle changes (exercise, sleep, stress reduction)
- Online menopause communities and support groups

What Has Their Experience Been Like?

- Many say HRT helped some symptoms but didn't fully restore desire.
- Some report feeling physically better but still emotionally disconnected.
- Supplement users often describe results as inconsistent.
- Many have spent hundreds or thousands trying different solutions.
- Women frequently report improvement in one area but not others.
- Some say counselling improved communication but not attraction.
- Many feel they are constantly experimenting on themselves.
- Results are often described as temporary rather than transformational.
- Most have tried multiple solutions before finding anything that helped.

- Many feel overwhelmed by conflicting advice.

What Does The Market Like/Dislike About These?

Likes:

- HRT can improve multiple menopause symptoms at once.
- Counselling can help couples communicate.
- Supplements feel more natural than pharmaceuticals.
- Toys can provide immediate results and certainty.
- Online communities make women feel less alone.
- Lifestyle changes improve overall wellbeing.

Dislikes:

- HRT can feel intimidating.
- Medical appointments can be frustrating.
- Supplements often make big promises with little proof.
- Counselling takes time and requires both partners' participation.
- Lifestyle changes require significant effort and consistency.
- Many solutions address only one piece of the problem.
- Trial and error becomes exhausting.
- Products often feel overhyped.
- Women dislike being told to "just relax" or "reduce stress."

Are There Any Horror Stories For These Solutions?

- Women spend years and significant money without meaningful improvement.
- Trying supplement after supplement with no noticeable change.
- Starting HRT with high expectations and feeling disappointed when desire doesn't return.
- Being dismissed by doctors and told symptoms are simply part of ageing.
- Partners interpret low desire as rejection, creating relationship tension.
- Couples entering therapy only after years of resentment have built up.
- Buying expensive intimacy products that are used once and forgotten.
- Feeling worse emotionally after a solution fails because it reinforces the belief that nothing will work.
- Being overwhelmed by contradictory advice from experts, influencers, and online forums.
- Feeling blamed for problems they believe are largely hormonal.

Do They Honestly Believe This Work?

- Most believe some solutions work for some women.
- Very few believe there is a universal solution.
- Trust in supplements is generally moderate to low.
- Trust in doctors is mixed due to experiences of being dismissed.
- HRT is often viewed as one of the most legitimate options, but not a complete answer.

- Relationship counselling is viewed as helpful but slow.
- Toys are generally believed to work for pleasure, but not necessarily for restoring desire.
- Many believe success depends on finding the right combination of solutions.
- The market is highly skeptical because most women have already tried several approaches.
- The dominant belief is: "It might work for others, but I'm not sure it will work for me."

REVIEWS + STUDIES

SIX BELIEFS

Based on everything absorbed, here are the 6 essential belief statements:

1. "I believe that what has happened to my body is real, physiological, and not something I simply have to accept as permanent."

She has to stop attributing this to age, attitude, or relationship problems before anything else can land. If she believes she's just getting older and this is inevitable, no product reaches her.

2. "I believe that the reason nothing has worked is not because I am broken, but because every solution I've tried was built around the wrong mechanism."

This is the pivotal belief. It removes self-blame, reframes all her past failures as logical rather than personal, and opens the door to something new being genuinely different rather than just another disappointment.

3. "I believe that friction is specifically and physiologically incompatible with what my body has become during menopause, and that every conventional solution, vibrators, creams, lubricants, has been quietly making things worse."

This is the mechanism of the problem. Once she holds this belief, every product she has tried before is disqualified on a scientific level. Not because they were bad products. Because they were the wrong tool for her specific physiology.

4. "I believe that stimulating blood flow back into compromised tissue through contactless air pressure, rather than friction, is how my body can actually respond again."

This is the mechanism of the solution. It has to feel logical, not magical. Her body hasn't stopped working. It needs the right stimulus. That distinction is what makes this believable rather than another empty promise.

5. "I believe that my desire, my sensation, and my intimate self are still alive and recoverable, and that I am not too far gone."

Without this belief the purchase has no emotional fuel. She has to believe recovery is possible for her specifically, not just for other women. This is the hope belief, and it must be earned through the argument, not simply claimed.

6. "I believe that this product was built specifically for my body, my age, and my situation, and that the risk of trying it is low enough to justify one more attempt."

The final belief that converts. The mechanism is right, the physiology makes sense, and the guarantee removes the financial sting of being disappointed again. This is the belief that turns everything that came before it into a purchase.

These six, in this sequence, are the complete argument. Each one builds on the last. By the time she reaches belief six, the Lem isn't a product she is being sold. It is the answer she has already reasoned her way to.
